the real facts and to remember that it is never your fault n It is a myth that only strangers carry out sexual attacks In most incidences of rape and sexual assault the attacker is known - it may even be a partner, family member or close friend n Whatever the circumstances of the attack, it is never your fault that it happened It makes no difference if you had been drinking or taking

Rape and 'real rape' - Australian Institute of Criminology

The classic 'real rape' for many people is rape by a stranger who uses a weapon, an assault done at night, outside (in a dark alley) with a lot of violence, resistance by the woman (it is always a woman in 'real rape') and, therefore, severe wounds and signs of struggle (Burt 1991) In fact, in every respect except one the time of day every element of this scenario is missing in most rapes

This includes the myth that 'real rape' is carried out by a stranger, involves force and active resistance Following a small number of controversial cases, where victims of rape were prosecuted after withdrawal of allegations (in particular in contexts of domestic violence), the CPS (2011) issued guidance on how prosecutors might deal with cases that appear to be 'false allegations

Attitudes to Sexual Consent - End Violence Against Women ...

For years campaigners against sexual violence have had to fight the notion that 'real rape' is a stranger in a dark alley We know that the vast majority of reports are about rape within relationships, between friends, partners and acquaintances And the law is unequivocal - rape happens when there is sex without consent - it doesn't matter if it's a stranger or someone you've been

Sentencing: The 'real rape' myth

Real rape myths are completely at odds with the real life experiences of the vast majority of rape victims The model stereotype exposes social reasoning about what constitutes rape, and what does not; it rests on prejudices, assumptions and normative expectations about gender roles and behaviour that are deeply rooted in patriarchal beliefs Stereotypes are part of the social tools people use
